

I have a portable television. What do I need to do to go digital?

Contributed by Administrator
Wednesday, 20 February 2008

You will need to get a digital box at a one-off cost. Look for the 'digital tick' logo and ask a retailer for more information.

Whilst the vast majority of televisions can be converted to receive a digital signal, your television needs to have either a scart or RF input. An example of this kind of portable TV is DVB (Digital Video Broadcasting).

Unfortunately if your portable television does not have either of these inputs it cannot be converted to receive digital television.